

Pork Butt Weekly Write-Up

The Synopsis

Man, what an interesting week in the NFL as we had some close games, and some outright dogshit ones. The Packers were not able to beat division rival Detroit in a close game. Geno Smith and the Seahawks proved they can manage Murray and the Cardinals in another division game. The Vikings (with potential Comeback Player of the Year Sam Darnold) grounded the Falcons in a one-sided score fest. Drew Lock led G-men played a good game but lost a close one to the Saints. Down in Tampa the Bucs took care of the Raiders in a lopsided game. Da Bears were absolute garbage in Frisco as the 49ers beat the dogshit out of them. MNF game gave us a close one between the Cowboys and the Bengals, but the curse of Leon Lett arose as a blunder on a blocked punt and shitty defense cost the 'Boys the game.

The Known

Dave v Jason

This game was close after the first quarter as Jason had a slim seven-point lead. However, this was the closest it was going to be. Jason opened a can of whoop-ass, offered a beat down on a discount, there are many ways to say what happened in this game, but I digress. Dave hit his weekly average of 116, but Jason decided to pop some blue bombers, and overperformed his weekly average (130) by eighty-nine points. Finishing the smackdown 219-116 and giving him his second franchise playoff victory.

Brandon v Jake

The projections have this game being a .2 margin in favor of Jake. The game was close for three quarters until Brandon figured it out and widened the gap as the game neared the final whistle moving him to the second round, giving him his second playoff win in three years. Jake was able to score getting close to his weekly average, but Brandon's team was just too much, the final here was 151-123.

The Unknown

Sky v Brandon

Earlier this year when these two teams met Brandon edged Sky by three points in a back-and-forth battle. Since that game, the teams have been in different directions as Brandon dropped some critical games late in the season while Sky held the second seed since that game. Both teams are coming into this matchup at full force as the weekly averages have this game giving Sky the edge and I believe this will hold true. Sky takes this matchup to move onto the championship game.

Jason v Rich

Rich was able to finish the year with twelve wins in thirteen games. The one loss Rich endured came from, you guessed (or you did not) Jason in week eight. Every team stumbles at least once and if we follow the numbers Rich has the advantage in this 140-130. I am not sure it will be that close, but I do foresee Rich taking this game, unless of course, Jason decided to pop some more blue bombers and pull out another score fest orgy from his ass.

Final Handy

Round one gave us two teams making their playoff debuts and two teams who managed those rookies with force. Playoffs are interesting when team numbers have a close matchup and I believe this week's games will be just that, close, but the higher seeds (Sky and Rich) will move on to play in the Pig Parlor. The losers of this week will play for third place. With that, may your beer be cold, Karma finds you today, and fuck your team....'mish out.